

Marianne GAYE-AYRAULT

Marianne has more than 20 years of experience in global settings. She has worked in higher and continuing education, business development and marketing, as well as strategic consulting and fundraising.

Marianne is currently the Global Training and Education Director at the International Union Against Tuberculosis and Lung Disease (The Union), serving the capacity building needs of public health organizations and governments around the globe. There she manages teams across the world that train healthcare professionals, mainly in low and middle-income countries.

Marianne earned a Master of Business Administration degree in International Business from Georgetown University, McDonough School of Business, in Washington, D.C., USA and her Bachelor of Arts degree in Business Administration from the MBA Institute (INSEEC U) in Paris, France. A dual citizen of France and the USA, Marianne currently lives near Paris with her husband and her two sons. She has been a PWN member since 2018 and is an active member of the International Hub.